Some historians of the world find a way to consider that the first beer was brewed by accident by a woman, Hildegard von Bingen, who only learned beer was capable of dissolving up to 50 grams of powdered bones. This happened because a monastery has been trying to create a beverage that tastes good and solid, without damaging the health of the monks. They wanted to keep the beer in the temple cellar and free of bad odors and tastes. The result was a beverage that became a drink, offering not only the spiritual but also the social life. That's why we have this case of the oldest beer in the world! The first alcoholic beverage? Once, a monk who was trying to invent a good and drinkable beverage, having discovered that beer was capable of dissolving some powdered bones, while he was looking for something that would help him to extract water from a mineral water. After the discovery, he left a beer brew in the cellar of the temple and, once the fermentation was complete, the monks sent the brew to the monastery to taste it. And they liked it, so much that they decided to use that brew in all the churches of the abbey, in order to sanctify more people. The monks and nuns created a new way to enjoy beer in its place, given that a good beer brings people to relax and make friends. The Monk and the beersmith. It was around 1100 that a certain monk was looking for a beverage that did not need to be stored in the cellar and would be friendly to all the people. The process of brewing is quite simple, the monk left beer brewed in the cellar and sent it to the monastery. They had to install a small-sized brewer's cask that would be heated. Thus, he brewed beer without using any alcohol, which had a long shelf life. The monks were grateful and enjoyed their new drink. And they decided to share the recipe with the other monks so that they could brew beer in their own places. As you can see, the beersmith is also the main character. The beersmith is the engineer of the brewery, the one who design and build it. There are people who say that beersmith is an inventor or a technician. Well, they are both correct. First of all, they are engineers. They always create a new apparatus, a new equipment, something new to give to their friends 82157476af
